As our college inaugurates one of its own graduates as its fifth president, we should busy ourselves once more with telling the story of RIC's glories.

To name a few, there are the thousands of alumni who are excellent teachers, able administrators and successful business leaders; the curriculum that is constantly changing to adjust to new ideas, methods and goals; the 5500 undergraduates — select, able and eager to learn and to serve — plus 2800 part time graduate students; 369 fine faculty members, making up a vast reservoir of knowledge, skills and intellectual resources; the $21,000,000 campus; accreditation by both national accrediting agencies; a prestigious fine arts program . . . to name a few!

Those of us who are closely associated with the college are constantly amazed to consider how fine it really is, and are dismayed to find graduates of the college who do not sense this at all!

It isn't just its age — although RIC is the oldest of the state's public institutions of higher learning, or its youth — its new buildings, new course offerings, new outlooks; but a combination of the two that is so impressive. RIC continues to educate highly competent teachers, but liberal arts and science curriculums are attracting enthusiastic students seeking careers in nursing, social service, medical technology, theatre, music, etc.

The dedication to children and the schools that was the mark of the earlier graduates has broadened. Dedication to the intellectual challenge for its own sake and to improving the lot of all men have been added.

"The finest state college in this part of the country" has been said so often that it has become commonplace — but it is still a true statement. Visitors to the campus never fail to be impressed and excited.

We who are graduates really have something to brag about. So let's take pride in Rhode Island College!

RIC will graduate Nurses

A traditional program with a new twist

Rhode Island College will graduate its first nurses in June, 1974, and the college's nursing education curriculum will be one college generation old!

The program was established in the fall of 1970 after a full year of planning under the leadership of Dr. Charlotte Coe. Even earlier, when the college accepted the mandate of the state to establish a nursing program, a year of preparatory study under Dr. Frank Dolyak, RIC biologist, preceded Dr. Coe's appointment as director of the program.

The fastest growing nursing program in the state, its enrollment has moved from about 40 in 1970-71 to almost 400 in 1973-74. The vagueness of the figures is deliberate and unavoidable. The rigorous but adaptable program has welcomed an extremely heterogeneous group of students whose backgrounds range from the usual high school preparation to master's degrees. Students enrolled in other RIC curriculums have discovered the nursing program and transferred to it; and a few students who enrolled in nursing have elected to transfer to other programs. Fifty, perhaps fifty-seven, will receive the Bachelor of Science degree in nursing in June, including most of the original enrollees and a few transfers who were able to earn some credits by examinations.

Frank DiLorenzo is one of seven men who will be in the first graduating class. A graduate of St. Raphael's Academy, Pawtucket, Frank had hoped to be a doctor, but this was financially impossible, so he decided to settle for his second career choice, teaching, and applied for the education curriculum at RIC. He was doing maintenance work at Miriam Hospital and by good luck fell into conversation with some male nurses. This opened up a new avenue. He called the RIC admissions office to withdraw from the entering class. "Fortunately, they asked me why, and when I said I wanted to enter a nursing program, they told me RIC was starting one. They checked my record and found I was acceptable, so that was it!"

From the beginning students, as well as faculty, were encouraged to influence the developing program in nursing education. An elected three-man advisory committee, to which Frank has been elected for two years, serves as a formal channel of communication between the students and the faculty and administration. Through this interaction, and the open door policy of the nursing faculty, students' special needs have been met and their observations and suggestions have been considered in developing the details of the program.

In his senior year Frank is involved in Nursing 330 and 350. This final clinical experience lasts 30 weeks. It involves six hours of seminar sessions each week and places each student in contact with health agencies for two full days a week. Ten weeks are in Crisis Care situations, ten are in Community Health agencies, and the final ten are spent in areas where the student wants or needs specialized emphasis.

Frank's first 10 week period is being spent at Rhode Island Hospital where he will spend time in the emergency room and in surgical intensive care. He will then move to the ambulatory patient care area of the hospital and later to the Ferri Middle School in Johnston.

Earlier nursing courses — there are six in all — provide philosophies, concepts, knowledges, skills, experiences and administrative opportunities that give a practical background to the student nurse. In what Dr. Coe refers to as "moving out into the community" the students are exposed to a variety of situations and experiences on which to build their professional abilities. One of the fascinating stages of his growth, Frank DiLorenzo says, was his junior year experience with a "family unit in crisis." By special arrangement with the family and all the agencies involved each student in this program is assigned to a family facing a health crisis. Frank's family was anticipating the birth of a baby. He was responsible for studying the family — observing, interviewing, recording and evaluating — to study the many elements involved in the situation, such as housing, sibling relationships and finances. He assisted in pre-natal care, the birth and post-natal care.

"It was scary, being called at one o'clock in the morning when she went into the hospital," Frank admits. But participation in the delivery and the care of mother and child were all part of this learning experience. Frank DiLorenzo has continued to work at Miriam Hospital 32 hours a week for the past four years. He married recently, but he still hopes to take post graduate work and to teach some day.

One advantage of the RIC program, he suggests, is that its diversity and depth opens the way for graduates to move in many directions.

"But not into medicine. That requires an entirely different preparation," he says. Besides, he loves nursing.

Charlotte Coe, the architect of the RIC program, came to RIC from the nurse education department of the University of Connecticut. She received her diploma from the Grace-New Haven School of Nursing and earned her BS and MA degrees at Teachers College, Columbia and her Ed D from the University of Wyoming.

A tall woman with a soft voice and a retiring manner, she is rigorous in her demands on herself, her faculty and her students, and adamant in her insistence on a program of top quality that will prepare nurses for professional service in the years ahead. A woman of her times, she welcomes the move of medicine into the community. Although she is looking forward to 1975 when the new biology-health sciences building is due to be opened, she has no interest in a building exclusively for nursing. She prefers that many of the student nurses, professional learning experiences to take place off campus, and much of their basic course work will take place in the regular academic classrooms of the college.

She speaks of "crisis intervention" rather than patient care, and emphasizes that nurses must be educated in prevention of illness and health maintenance as well as care for the sick.

Objectives and goals have a large part in the nursing program, and some grades are given on the basis of student-faculty evaluation sheets that measure the student's performance in the light of these objectives.

And the objectives have been democratically formulated.

In her attempt to assure a sound, forward reaching and honest preparation for nurses, Dr. Coe has deliberately recruited a staff that represent a variety of educations, philosophies and attitudes, and has encouraged them to contribute, to evaluate and to react from their respective backgrounds. The result has been an exciting, challenging exchange.

There are now twelve on the nursing faculty: Dr. Coe; Associate Professor

Senior Leamon T. Cox and "Patient"

Halony M. Maloof, a graduate of St. Joseph's Hospital School of Nursing, with a BS from Boston University and MS from Boston College; Associate Professor Anne L. Milhaven, who holds a BSN from Incarnate Word College and MSN from Catholic University of America; Associate Professor Lucille A. Sullivan, who received both BSPHN and M Ed from Boston College; Assistant Professor Osky Cascone, a graduate of R. I. Hospital School of Nursing, who holds a BS from Teachers College, Columbia and an MS from Boston University; Assistant Professor Claire D. Maranda, who holds a BS from the Boston College School of Nursing and an MS from Boston College; and Instructor Sylvia Zaki, who received her BSN from Russell Sage College and her MS from Boston University. New this term are: Assistant Professor Rena Maddox, who holds both BS and MS degrees from Boston University School of Nursing and four Instructors: Anne Carty, BS, Salve Regina, MS Boston College; Linda A. Cathers, BS Salve Regina, MS Boston College; Patricia Fallon, BS Boston University; and Sherry Strammiello, BS in nursing, Russell Sage College.

The focus of the program is on a broad education, with a solid basis in those sciences on which the professional courses are built. A year of biology and one of chemistry are required, plus three semesters of advanced biology, anatomy, physiology and microbiology. Psychology is required and sociology is strongly recommended as an elective.

On this academic base is built a professional nurse, ready to develop by experience and further education in the individual's area of interest. Starting with the sophomore year there is a nursing course each semester, all of which involve off campus activities.

Among the health agencies that are cooperating in the college's nursing education program are Memorial Hospital in Pawtucket, Rhode Island Hospital, Roger Williams General Hospital, Providence Lying-In Hospital, the Veterans' Administration Hospital in Providence, Rhode Island Group Health Association, the Providence Health Clinics, Rhode Island Medical Center and the Johnston Public Schools.

Among the 182 new students who enrolled in the nursing program this fall are 72 "transfers". This means they have had some background in college courses or in nursing education for which they might expect some credit toward their RIC degree. Some will undoubtedly receive considerable credit, others will take the full four-year program.

Each student is treated as an individual. His record is carefully checked for transfer credit and when it is feasible he may take proficiency examinations in certain academic areas and in some parts of the nursing courses.

Dr. Coe calls it a process of "translating past experiences and study into bona fide college credit; identifying areas of strength and weakness, and planning accordingly." Flexibility is a hallmark of the program.

Among the seniors there are several students who illustrate the variety of backgrounds, motivations and goals in the group.

Carol Poznanski, mother of four, had started the Roger Williams Hospital program in 1953 but left to marry. Now that her daughters are 17 and 16 and her twin boys are 14, she is earning her BS in nursing — with a minor in Art Education!

Bernice Ashe of Cumberland, grandmother of four, is a former nurses' aide. Admitted on the basis of high school equivalency tests, she made the dean's list in her sophomore year.

One senior already holds a master's degree. A former biology instructor, a fireman, a former florist, an ambitious welfare mother, and a registered nurse who joined the class in September, will be among the first graduates.

Beyond the degrees they will receive in June, the graduates must take the State Board examinations for licensure in order to gain the coveted "RN". This state licensure of all registered nurses guarantees that all have met state standards, a professional evaluation that Dr. Coe applauds.

The department chairman is confident, but understandably concerned, about accreditation by the National League of Nursing, which can come only after the first class has been graduated. The program has been accredited by the Rhode Island Board of Nurses Registration and Nursing Education.

It is difficult now to predict the effect of RIC's nursing education program on the state, or the changing pressures that will be put on the college. All the state's hospitals except St. Joseph's and Newport have phased out their nursing education programs. It was in the face of this trend that the state nurses and health leaders urged the college to set up its nursing program. "You'll be graduating 200 nurses a year," college officials were told.

Statistics obtained from the State Board of Nurse Registration and Nursing Education indicate that 329 nurses took the examination for registration in 1972. In the same year 597 students enrolled in nursing programs — 232 would seek degrees, the others would follow LPN or RN programs at RIJC (264) St. Joseph's (58) and Newport (43). URI and RIC each had reported 97 enrolled, Salve Regina College had 38.

Time — and such influences as budgetary allocations, the job market, and facilities available — will tell how large the RIC program will become. But the forceful voices of its strong faculty and a proud and well-prepared pioneer class will certainly insure its quality and guarantee its influence on the community.

Trademarks are His Business

An interview with Frank Campbell '46

Freshman Christine Campbell meets President and Mrs. Willard as Frank and Agnes Finan Campbell look on.

On the forty-second floor of Boston's Prudential Center are located the offices of Thomson and Thomson, Inc., a legal firm dealing exclusively in trademark research. Its president has come to his position by a route that began at RIC. He is Francis W. Campbell, '46.

Looking out toward the Berkshires, visible from his offices on a clear day, Frank Campbell reminisced a bit recently about his years at RIC.

Beginning as a member of the Class of '43, he left RIC in his sophomore year to enlist as an aviation cadet in the Army Air Corps. After four years and fifty or more ocean crossings as an Air Force navigator, he returned to RIC to complete his undergraduate work with the Class of '46.

After graduation, Frank Campbell accepted a position as a trademark examiner with the U. S. Patent Office in Washington. It might be said that his professional route was thereby set. From 1947 to 1953, while working as a trademark examiner, he also attended George Washington University Law School. "I wondered," he says, "if my small college experience would be adequate at a law school whose students had attended the Ivy League and Big Ten colleges and universities." It took him only a few weeks to find that an RIC graduate could hold his own.

Following his graduation from George Washington in 1951, Mr. Campbell became an associate of Thomson and Thomson, a Boston-based law firm and private trademark search organization. He has served since as a partner in the firm and has been its president since 1971.

He describes his firm as one of "... attorneys who work for other attorneys." As trademark attorneys, he and his firm conduct research for most of the major corporations in the United States, through their attorneys, and most law firms specializing in trademark matters. The main purposes of this research are: to avoid duplication of trade names; to avoid potential conflicts with a proposed or existing company name; and to assist producers in making wise selections in branding their products before applying for trademarks.

A staff of fifty-two people carries out a dual search system. They utilize manual files consisting of over 4,000,000 cross reference cards listing approximately 800,000 active and inactive trademarks registered with the U. S. Patent Office, as well as trademark registries and directories from the various states which contain an additional listing of several hundred thousand trademarks. In addition to manual listings, an NCR Century 200 computer system, which mirrors the manual search and reporting system, is used for research.

Recent examples of the firm's work were the searches conducted for two well known oil companies which changed their names, namely Exxon and Citgo. A trademark, says Frank Campbell, is the "... most valuable, single piece of property — besides goodwill — that a company or corporation has." Its protection is important and worthwhile.

As president of Thomson and Thomson, Mr. Campbell holds membership in a number of trademark and patent law associations and committees. He is an active member of the International Patent and Trademark Association and a consultant to World Industrial Property Organization of Geneva, Switzerland, on the establishment of a computerized international trademark searching system.

Along with his professional responsibilities, he has found time to put to use the educational training he received in his years at RIC. His firm carries on a co-operative work study program with Northeastern University of on-the-job training for undergraduates. He himself serves as a part-time teacher in two capacities: one as a guest lecturer in trademark law at various Boston area colleges and a second as a volunteer part-time instructor of English to members of Boston's growing Spanish-speaking community. In preparation for this latter role he has gone back to school himself.

His ties with RIC are also shared by members of his family. His wife, Agnes Finan Campbell, was a member of his graduating class at RIC in '46. The Campbells, who reside in Needham, Massachusetts, have five children: Frank, Jr., a '72 graduate of Boston College; Janice, now Mrs. Frank Noonan, a '73 graduate of Boston College; Scott, 13, and Robin, 12, who attend Needham Junior High School; and Christine who this year carries on the family tradition at RIC as a member of the freshman class, majoring in theatre.

The Campbells are back on campus.

New Faces on the Board of Regents

Three sub-boards organized

The Board of Regents meet in Roberts Hall. Left to right around the table: A. Giangiacomo, S. Shaw, M. Lyons, A. Capotosto, N. Willis, A. Carlotti, J. Kane, H. Nardone, M. VanLeesten, J. Gendron, R. Zorabedian.

The 1973 Legislature voted into existence a new Board of Regents for Education, a 15-person body to replace the board of nine that had been set up under 1969 legislation.

Albert E. Carlotti of Warwick, a semi-retired investment banker and active URI alumnus, was named chairman of the board by Governor Philip Noel.

The board has divided itself into three sub-boards, as provided by the legislation, to deal with Elementary and Secondary Education, Post-Second Education, and Special Populations.

John Kane, president of Federal Products Corp., was named chairman of the Post-Secondary subcommittee. A graduate of Temple University, Mr. Kane came to Rhode Island from Pennsylvania in 1969. Other members of this sub-board include:

Augustine Capotosto Jr., chief of laboratory services at the Electric Boat Division of General Dynamics. A graduate of Providence College, he earned his doctorate in analytical chemistry from URI.

Richard Zorabedian, administrator of the apprenticeship program for Local 57, International Union of Operating Engineers, holds a bachelor of science degree in business administration from URI.

Susan L. Shaw is a senior, majoring in anthropology, at URI.

Bernard V. Buonanno is president of the New England Container Co. Inc. A graduate of Brown University, from which he also received his masters degree, he started his career as a teacher and coach at Classical High School. He has served on the Providence School Committee and State Board of Education. Mr. Carlotti serves ex officio on all of the sub-committees.

Henry Nardone, program manager of the Electric Boat Division of General Dynamics and long-time member of the Westerly School Committee, is chairman of the subcommittee for elementary-secondary Education. A graduate of URI, he holds a degree in naval architecture and marine engineering from M.I.T. Other members of his subcommittee are John J. Lynch, business manager of the Steamfitters Local Union 476; Mary P. Lyons, assistant professor of English at Bryant College, a graduate of Simmons College; and Norma Willis, Pembroke College graduate and for fourteen years a member of the North Kingston school committee.

Michael VanLeesten is chairman of the sub-board on Special Populations. A 1965 graduate of RIC and recipient of the 1969 Alumni Achievement Award, he is director of the Opportunities Industrialization Center. Also serving on this committee are: Francis J. Boyle, Newport attorney, who has been active on the Newport County Catholic Regional School Board; Andre R. Bonte of N. Smithfield, graduate of Lowell Textile Institute, president of a textile firm in Woonsocket; and Richard Zorabedian.

Two legislators are on the Board of Regents but do not serve on the sub-committee. Joseph S. Gendron of Central Falls is chairman of the Senate Finance committee; Anthony Giangiacomo of Providence is a member of the House Finance Committee.

Many of the meetings of the Board of Regents and the subcommittees are held at RIC and all are open to the public. Dates and places are announced in the Providence Journal, but the first and third Thursday of the month are the usual meeting days, or evenings, for the Board.

Even the finance committee's discussions and decisions on the 1973-74 budget took place at scheduled meetings to which the public were invited. The finance committee is made up of the subcommittee chairmen and the legislative members.

Each subcommittee presented recommendations for the financial support of its area of education. From these the finance committee worked out a single budget which was presented to the full board for further debate and discussion.

As finally adopted the budget will mean an 8½% increase in RIC's budget over the 1973-74 allocations, and a 14% increase in the state's appropriations to the College.

Around the College

GRADUATES RETURN

Seven RIC graduates have returned to the college this fall as members of the faculty. In addition 15 recent graduates are serving as graduate assistants.

ROSEMARY MURPHY '65 has been named instructor in the Primary Resource Room of Henry Barnard School. A resident of Rumford, she earned her master's degree at the University of Oregon in 1972 and served as Assistant School Director at Meeting Street School during the past year.

ELEANOR GAUDET SKENYON '41 has been named Assistant Principal of the Henry Barnard School and Assistant Professor of Education. A part time RIC faculty member since 1968, she has served as coordinator for Title I programs in Providence since 1971. She is the widow of the late John Skenyon, and has three children. The Skenyons live in North Providence.

RAQUEL REBE SHAPIRO (Mrs. Nathan) '60 has been named assistant professor at Henry Barnard School. A resident of Pawtucket, she holds her masters of education degree and her CAGS from RIC.

WILLIAM ARMITAGE '66 has been named Project Associate at the Center for Education and Research. A Distinguished Graduate of the USAF Air Traffic Program and the Control Officers School, he has been employed as a systems analyst at the Citizens Bank. The Armitages — she is the former PATRICIA BUCKLEY '66 — have one son. They live in West Warwick.

CAROL CARLONI, newly appointed Recorder in the records office, received her BS from RIC in 1973. RUSSELL J. MONAGHAN, who received his bachelor of arts degree from RIC in 1970, has been named Technical Director and Shop Foreman for the Auditorium, Roberts Hall.

ELAINE A. DEFUSCO '73 has been named a Teacher Assistant at Henry Barnard School.

Graduate assistants appointed for 1973-74 include:

JACLYN D. ACHILLE '73, mathematics; CATHERINE WHEELER ALLAIRE '61, elementary education; PETER A. DIMEO '73, psychology; CHARLOTTE KENT '73, psychology; JOSEPH T. LERO '73, mathematics; O'CONNOR MAHABIR '73, curriculum center; JOHN MEADOWS '73, industrial education; CATHERINE MYCROFT '72, secondary education; JOHN FLYNN '61, reading center; CLAIRE M. LANGE '73, instructional technology; KATHERINE C. BAKER '72, counseling services; ROSALIE COTE '73, biology; WILLIAM HASENFUS '73, history; HOLLY MARTY '73, career development; ROBERT MENDES '73, student housing; and GAIL COIA MIGNACCA '67, counselor education.

Curtis K. Lafollette, Assistant Professor of Art at Rhode Island College was commissioned by the Alumni Association Board to render a presidential medallion as the alumni's gift to the college in honor of Charles B. Willard on his inaugural. Mr. Lafollette, a graduate of the University of Kansas, with his M.F.A. from Cranbrook Academy of Art, is widely recognized for his work in silver. A sketch of his design for the Willard Medallion and its chain is in the foreground.

ALUMNI FUND DRIVE

The telephone is the key to the 1974 Alumni Fund Drive, and hundreds of alumni will be calling from their homes and from Alumni House during the month of October.

Co-chairmen Ed and Peg Day sent a flyer and pledge card to every graduate on October 1, and hope to follow up with a telephone call to every alumnus in Rhode Island and nearby Massachusetts. Area chairmen in cities and towns throughout the state have organized telephone "squads" to make calls.

"We are emphasizing pledges," Ed Day points out. "Payments can be made from January to May of next year." By encouraging alumni to think in terms of dividing their gifts into four or six payments the co-chairmen hope to exceed last year's fund income of $25,000.

All Alumni Fund donors are considered active members of the Association. An amount approximately five dollars per donor is budgeted to support the activities of the Association—Awards, Review, postage, etc.—and the balance is allocated to meet special needs of the College, such as scholarships and pilot projects.

So when your telephone rings in mid-October, expect a cheery voice to say "Hello! I'm calling for the Rhode Island College Alumni..."

CHAIRMEN NAMED

Marilynn Schwaner, president of the Alumni Association has named the following chairmen for 1973-74:
Awards — Sandra Cunha Vandal '61;
Agents — Nancy Beagan Miller '56;
Finance — Virginia Gregory Belanger '55;
Fund — Edward and Margaret DiBiasio Day '61 & '63;
Nominating — Huberta Maher McDevitt '49;
Review — Marguerite Brazeil Bourgeois: '59;
Alumni Night — Daureen Durrell Aulenbach '61;
Awards Review — Helen Page Gilligan '47;
Awards Dinner — Lynette Blackmore '73;
Inaugural — David Capaldi and Joseph Menard '64 & '60;
Legislation — John Hagan '55;
Theatre — Henry Guillotte '59;
Travel — Dorothy McLear Sullivan '32;

DISCOUNTS AVAILABLE

The Alumni Association has set up an arrangement with the Cooperative Book Service of Reading, Mass., to make books available at discount prices. A one-time registration fee of one dollar will enable alumni to receive discounts of 10-25% on standard publications. Details have been mailed to active alumni.

The Alumni Office will be interested in receiving comments on this service.

THEATRE PRODUCTION SCHEDULED

The RIC Alumni Theatre Group at its October 16 meeting planned for the 1974 play production.

Edward Rondeau will direct, with Donald Babbitt as technical director.

A comedy, the title to be announced, will be presented February 28, March 1 and 2 in the Little Theatre, Roberts Hall.

Dr. Henry Guillotte has been serving as Theatre Group representative on the alumni board pending election of group officers. He, Alice Reinhardt and Arlyne Harrower have served as the Alumni Theatre Committee during the past year.

Note — Any alumnus who wants to receive notices of Theatre Group activities, including try-outs for the play, are invited to call or send their names to the Alumni Office.

FELLOWSHIPS FOR WOMEN

The Danforth Foundation has announced its tenth competition for Graduate Fellowships for Women.

Women whose careers include a continuous break of at least three years duration from both studying and teaching are invited to seek further information on this appointment.

Application materials will be sent to individuals who request them from Director, Graduate Fellowships for Women, Danforth Foundation, 222 Central Avenue, St. Louis, Missouri 63105.

Class News

Send notes about yourselves and your fellow alumni to your news notes secretaries. If you do not have a news secretary or if you do not know the year of the subject, send the item to the Alumni Office and it will be directed to the right person.

AGNES NEWCOMB COBB and JIM planned to enjoy their Fiftieth Anniversary simply and quietly at home. "Not so!" said their four sons and their neighbors. On Sunday afternoon, August 26, a host of people came trooping gaily to 247 Richmond Drive, Warwick. It was amazing to see the careful planning of every detail develop quickly and easily into a surprise garden party, a gracious expression of the love and esteem of their neighborhood...But that was only the prelude, for on the evening of August 29, there was a happy family dinner party when two sons and their families gathered with life-time friends at Old Acres to honor Agnes and Jim. The rose-bud favors, the place cards and table decorations were made by granddaughter Elizabeth Ann. The other two sons and their families who live on the West Coast joined the festive group by telephone and telegraph and classmates and friends sent a "refreshing" shower of cards. From a distance has come a newsy letter from HELEN ALDRICH CROWTHERS who now lives at 120 Roy Street, Seattle, Washington, 98109. Helen, who retired in June from her position as librarian at Epiphany School wrote happily of her recent cruise among the Islands of the South Pacific. She flew from the West Coast to visit her son who is an architect on a two-year contract with the government of American Samoa. Now upon her return home, she concludes, "I look forward to some work and some play, and am grateful for good health!" Encouraging news comes from several classmates who have been ill: ISABEL CARTER MARTIN reports her surgeons are pleased with her progress. She has spent much of the summer with her daughter at Matunuck and expects to be at her home in Hope soon...ALICE MURPHY BARLOW after several weeks of hospitalization with a heart attack spent some time with her daughter in Taunton and now is gaining steadily at her home in Bristol....ROSE FLYNN is at home once more after her period of hospitalization and a stay with her cousin....EMMA HANLEY HOUE after extensive tests at Miriam is presently recuperating at her daughter's in Cranston. Our travelers include MURIEL and SAM PLACE who are on a 24-day cruise down the Atlantic seaboard to the Islands, on into the Caribbean, then along the South American coast and back through the Panama Canal....BARBARA DONAGHY QUINN writes she attended with her husband his Fiftieth Anniversary from Georgetown Law School where the degree of Doctor of Juris Prudence was conferred upon him and he was also appointed to the President's Council of Georgetown University.... GERTRUDE DUNN HANNIGAN, who has now moved to her new home in Narragansett, has returned from a sojourn in New York and Philadelphia.. As usual JENNIE KELLEY KIERNAN, VERONICA TRAINOR and IRENE MCMURRAY LAMONDE spent a summer holiday on the Cape, as did RUTH TAYLOR KIPPAX....DOT SULLIVAN will soon be touring Canada with her sister and MARJORIE MILKE HART, after a summer of teaching Crafts in Vermont, will return to her home in Florida in late Fall.

Alumni who remember DR. WILLIAM VINAL will be interested to learn that the Lillie Hale Vinal Memorial Fund has been created in memory of Mother Vinal. Several of our class responded to the request of the South Shore Natural Science Center at Norwell, Massachusetts for a contribution to the library presently being established and Cap'n Bill is delighted with this recognition. Reunions past and future: On May 27, 1973 twenty members gathered at the Holiday Inn, downtown Providence for a delicious luncheon and a gala afternoon. Our Newsletter will soon carry proposed plans for our Fall Reunion to be held in late October.

Former Faculty: In Memoriam

MABEL RANGER WHIPPLE

Mabel G. Whipple, widow of Dr. Lucius Whipple, former president of Rhode Island College, died on Tuesday, June 12, after a short illness. Mrs. Whipple is well remembered by students of the forties for her gracious presence at college ceremonies and social activities. Honorary bearers at her internment were Dr. Charles B. Willard, President of RIC, Vice President Donald Hardy, Professor Emeritus Ernest Allison, Dr. Renato Leonelli, Assistant Commissioner of Education Arthur Pontarelli, Charles Shea, Pawtucket Superintendent of Schools and Lawrence J. Sasso Jr., Director of the RIC News Bureau.

She is survived by her daughter Dorothy Whipple Burgess, of Greenville, and two grandchildren.

W. CHRISTINA CARLSON

W. Christina Carlson '23 was a member of the teaching faculty of RIC before she received her certificate in 1923. She earned her baccalaureate in 1925 and her masters degree in 1932. In addition she studied extensively at Brown University.

After thirty years of teaching biology and penmanship she became Registrar in 1954, a role which involved her serving as chairman of the College Admissions Committee for ten years, and as special advisor to students with problem programs as well. She retired in 1965.

An ardent conservationist she was one of the founders of the Conservation Workshops which flourished in the forties as a summer study facility for teachers. She was very active in the Alumni Association and in the council of Gloria Dei Lutheran Church.

Friends have established a W. C. Carlson Memorial Fund in the RIC Foundation, to which contributions are welcome, in the hope of setting up an endowed memorial on campus.

You'd have to understand French to appreciate the joke shared by Professor Nelson A. Guertin and President Charles B. Willard at the October 17 reception held to honor the retiring teacher of French on the completion of thirty-seven years on the faculty of Rhode Island College.

The Class of 1923 held its fiftieth year reunion at the Ramada Inn, Seekonk, last spring.
